SHOES for Ladies, Misses, Children, Men and Boys. No old, out of style goods to run off, but new, fresh goods which are put at prices to close them out. If we can suit you, this is your chance to get a bargain. At $1.98 Ladies fine quality and well made Kid Shoes, regular $2.75 quality. Men's and Boys' Shoes at away down prices. Every pair in the department cut to closing out prices.

Clothing.

This is a big department which we have concluded to close out. The variety quality and styles will compare favorably with the exclusive clothing houses; in order to make quick sales the prices have been cut in many instances to half. You are requested to visit this special sale, as we have many articles that are not mentioned that are put up at bargain closing prices; Suits, parts of suits, overalls, pants, shirts, suspenders, underwear, gloves, collars, cuffs, hats, caps, valises and trunks. Rush is the word. We don't wish to continue long with closing out.

CARPETS AND RUGS—This is the season of the year to buy these goods. If this sale is a little too early, come and buy what you need and we will store the goods for you. Our prices are very much lower than you think unless you come and see the styles and qualities we have, and then compare prices with any other you have seen. This will prove to you our claim of selling lower than any other house.

PICTURE FRAMES AND PICTURES—Don't delay leaving your orders for frames of any kind. The present stock of moulding is going out rapidly. One-fourth off our lowest prices is the way we are doing it. Any picture we have framed at cut prices. Now is the time to get them, another week may be too late.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AND SHEET MUSIC—Mandolins, violins, guitars, banjos, French harps, musical books and sheet music going out at closing prices.

Our Dry Goods Department is surprising this spring. New goods at the lowest prices are winners. Our notion stock, ribbon stock, underwear and skirts in full variety.

The McCall patterns appear to have the call. The best patterns, latest styles and lowest prices have given it to them.

Every department rushing with customers. Bulk Garden Seeds, fresh and the best. Prices, as usual, the lowest at

THE FIDDLE DOCTOR

ALL the objects the result of man's ingenuity and skill, there is scarcely one that combines such strength and weakness, such durability and fragility as does the violin. Able to endure a strain of many pounds in one direction, in another the pressure of the thumb will crush it like an egg shell; lasting three centuries in some instances; in others, through ill use, falling to pieces in a short time. With such a delicate constitution it is no wonder that the violin, like its owner, is easily out of order, especially when it gets along in years, having innumerable complaints in many ways similar to the ills that man is heir to. It is for this reason that we find in every large city men who make a specialty of repairing instruments, and what is more they are usually kept as busy as their prototypes, the family physicians. Perhaps it would be a better comparison to liken them to the surgeons, or, still better, those more modern practitioners, the osteopaths or bone-setters, for the fiddle doctor must be able to read just every part of his patient's anatomy that has in any way become misplaced or broken. To appreciate what this means we must remember that there are from 50 to 60 pieces of wood in one of these music boxes and every piece must fit as true and snug as do our own ribs and joints.

We shall find one of these repairers of old fiddles in a room upstairs where there is a good light window, but no necessity for making any display. A look into the room will remind one, not so much of a hospital (to use our old figure), as of that fabulous workshop the zenith of violin creation, Cremona continued to be famous for instruments that bore labels of Amati, Rugerio and others. From Italy the craft extended into Germany and France, and a few makers sprung up in England.

But to return to our humble fiddle doctor. Though he has tried his hand many times at original work, he does not aspire to fame for his own creations; his life is devoted to the care of such old masterpieces as have met with some mishap, or succumbing to old age and the inclemencies of the climate, show cracks in their tops and sides, or display openings where the glue has given way.

If the injury is of a serious nature he runs a thin knife around the edge and deftly removes the top, in order that he may the more easily reach the seat of the trouble.

This opening and regluing of instruments seems not to harm them in the least, unless the wood should splinter in the process. But to a lover of violins it is almost as painful to see his knife enter the body of the violin and to hear the glue crack, as it would be to experience the wound in one's person. But with violins, as with men and animals, the surgeon's skill is necessary to repair the injury occasioned by a fall, bruise or abrasion.

But our friend is not without his troubles, not the least of them being the continual deluge of old, worthless fiddles sent him for inspection and appraisal. Every sender has either had the old box for years in the family, or has purchased it from some such long-time owner.

Antonio Stradivari in His Workshop.

of the gods, where men were made in fragments from clay and divine inspiration. Here we see fiddles of all sizes and shapes, in course of construction or in process of demolition, old fiddles and new, complete and in fragments, here a back, there a belly, the ribs and neck hung on a string stretched from wall to wall, some freshly varnished, others innocent of outer covering or with the original varnish removed and the naked wood exposed to the unpropitious eye.

To the uninitiated, to whom all fiddles look alike, it is a source of wonder how they can be told apart, and still more surprising when a number of them are lying around in fragments, by what means, short of magic, is this little speckled man, with his assortment of surgical instruments, enabled to tell to what particular instrument this rib or that brace belongs. But the wonder is only evidence of ignorance, for not only has each individual instrument a character that is stamped on every part, but the parts are so nicely adjusted and fit so perfectly that it would be difficult for a mere tyro to go wrong in the reconstruction, providing the parts were perfect.

The repairer's tools are simple and yet unique. His knives are thin strips of steel an inch in width set in wooden handles, the cutting edge of which is not on the side, but one corner is ground off, as a draper cuts a ribbon on the bias, and this diagonal edge is sharpened and serves the double purpose of knife and chisel. He has besides these a great variety of planes, chisels, compasses and calipers for measuring the surface and thickness of woods, molds for setting the frames, sandpaper, glue, oil and varnishes for finishing; all surrounding him within easy reach, but seemingly in the greatest confusion.

The accompanying illustration is a portrait of the greatest violin maker of all times, Antonio Stradivari, who lived in Cremona early in the seventeenth century. This man was a pupil of Nicola Amati, a member of a family that had already made Cremona famous for its instruments.

Before this, from 1560 to 1610, there lived in Lombardy a famous maker, Gaspar de Salo, some of whose instruments exist to this day, being among the best as well as the earliest specimens of the modern violin.

While the works of Stradivari mark

There is a mistaken idea prevalent that an old fiddle is a good fiddle, while, on the contrary, there is a world of difference between the "good old fiddle" and an old good fiddle. While a good man will presumably improve with age, it does not necessarily follow that an old man is heavenly-minded. Our doctor has to make this statement innumerable times, that age only improves original worth, and every time he writes back to the sender of an heirloom that it is not worth the cartage, he crushes some fond hope and makes an enemy for life.

The outsider is deceived by the labels that are inserted in every factory instrument, not to be defrauded, but to explain that the one in question is made after the model of Gaglianeri, Amati, or Stradivari. Of instruments that are intended to deceive, their name is legion, and it requires the eye of an expert to pass on the genuineness of the label and workmanship.

As a proof of the world-wide deception that are at present as many genuine (?) Strads as there are pieces of the true cross. As a tree is known by its fruit, and a man by his works, and if the instrument has this, the artist cares little whether it be a Bergonzi or a Studebaker. It follows, therefore, that when a small fortune is paid for some well-known instrument, it is because it has that intrinsic value, aside from the genuineness of the label.
